In Acts 2 we find a running crowd. They’re drawn together by a new sound. A symphony of languages. People are amazed and perplexed. What does it mean for such a diverse group to hear about God’s deeds of power in their own tongues? And then, Peter stands with the eleven. He raises his voice and invites the crowd to listen to what he has to say. Hold on... This is Peter. A fisherman, not a performer or a politician. Someone more used to mending nets than delivering speeches.

What’s happened? How did we get from hiding behind locked doors to here? Psalm 68:35 tells us that, “God gives power and strength to his people”. It is in this power that Peter stands alongside the eleven. In the power and strength of the Holy Spirit Peter announces the good news of Jesus. He urges those listening to repent and be baptised.

Twenty centuries on, we have this wonderful knowledge of God in Jesus! We have inherited the disciple’s commission to share the good news with love and confidence. And through knowing Jesus, we believe God’s transformation of individuals, communities and cultures is possible. Indeed, we can witness to this transformation in our own lives!

We long, not only for the transformation that comes through diligent academic study and inspiring ministry experience, although these are valuable and important parts of God’s kingdom-work. We long for the transformation that happens when God gives power and strength to his people.

“God gives power and strength to his people.”

The Psalmist witnesses to the fact that God, “…gives power and strength to his people”. He does this by remembering what God has done for others, and because he has experienced it for himself. He urges readers to trust that God is able and willing to give power and strength to them too, in their different time and place.

“We long for the transformation that happens when God gives power and strength to his people.”

As God gives power and strength to all those who will be sent out from Ridley Hall this summer, they can step expectantly towards God’s hopeful future. This future will be an adventure and, like any good adventure, it will be full of opportunity and challenge. It will be a future in which the Holy Spirit is transforming lives and God’s Kingdom is coming with justice, mercy and peace.

STORIES OF GOD’S PROVISION FROM THE CHAPEL AT RIDLEY HALL

he chapel has always been at the heart of community life and worship at Ridley Hall, but it is also a space where God speaks individually to his people, with words of challenge, encouragement and comfort.

We recently asked those who have been part of the community here to share their stories with us. One response came from Ann Pangbourne, whose husband trained here in the 1980s. Ann tells of how she heard God’s comforting voice during a difficult time for her and her family. “A week into our first term,” says Ann, “our house purchase had fallen through; we had sold our own home and had been kindly invited to live, with our five children, in the principal’s lodge with the principal, his wife, family, dog and puppies.”

At the end of a challenging term, with Christmas approaching and no house purchase in sight, Ann recalls a moment when God spoke to her. “We were in the chapel. A banner from the previous leavers’ year proclaimed God’s faithfulness to those He had called, and we sang: ‘Great is thy faithfulness’. When we came to the line that declares: All I have needed thy hand hath provided, peace enveloped me: it was true — and it remained true for 37 years of parish ministry.”

There are many such stories of God speaking to his people in this special place. If you have a memory of the chapel you’d like to share with us, we’d love to hear from you. Drop us a line and tell us your story:
Email us on development@ridley.cam.ac.uk

After 130 years at the heart of our community, our beautiful chapel is in need of some long-awaited repairs and restoration. The brickwork needs to be repointed, the roof repaired, the walls repainted.

In line with other work we have undertaken at our site, we also want to improve the accessibility features of the chapel so that all of our community, and the wider community of the Cambridge Theological Federation, can benefit from using this space and joining with others in it. We also need to undertake major repairs to the chapel organ.

We have now launched an appeal for the chapel, to help raise the £75,000 we need to fund this work.

If you’d like to make a donation specifically for the benefit of the chapel you can do so by sending us a cheque payable to “Ridley Hall”, and including a note to indicate that the funds are for this purpose, or you can donate at www.ridley.cam.ac.uk/donate and leave a message to indicate that your gift is for the chapel.

Dungeons & Dragons

Final-year ordinand Daniel Bishop asks what value the role-playing game may hold for sustainable and effective leadership in the Church.

HAVE YOU EVER FOUGHT A DRAGON, SAVED A PRINCESS, OR BEFRIENDED A LOWLY GOBLIN WHO IS DESPERATELY SEEKING THEIR FAMILY?

Such experiences may seem otherworldly, as though they have leaped out of the pages of a J. R. R. Tolkien, George R. Martin, or Terry Pratchett novel; but you can experience them too. Dungeons and Dragons has been in the public eye since the 1980s but carries with it a long history of controversy and criticism. In the 80s, the game was accused of promoting Satanism, witchcraft and violence. In recent years, D&D has been enjoying a resurgence in popularity, and it is increasingly being viewed in a more positive light. The game has been featured in popular TV shows like Stranger Things and The Big Bang Theory, and D&D livestreams are some of the more popular gaming streams found on YouTube and Twitch. As a result, D&D is becoming seen less as a niche hobby and more as a legitimate form of entertainment and socialisation.

The question, therefore, might be what such a game offers to the Church? The answer may be that the game offers a lot for the Church’s leaders. In playing the game, participants can develop greater levels of self-understanding as they embody a character. In addition, skills in boundary setting, emotional intelligence and promoting personal wellbeing are all developed by regular engagement with the game. Such skills are invaluable for ministry, but the benefits of the game do not stop here.

Traditionally, critical reflection, pastoral care, conflict management, team management, establishing vision and public speaking are all skills that have to be practised in “real-world” environments. However, entering into the fantasy world of D&D provides a safe and secure, consequence-free environment where these essential tasks of ministry can be formed and honed.

Daniel recently spoke at the Boston Theological Interreligious Consortium conference on “Theology, Religion, and Dungeons & Dragons.” He presented an essay he is currently writing on the topic of “Dungeons, Dragons and Effective Leadership: Can Tabletop Role-Playing Games be Utilized in Forming and Sustaining Clergy in Ministry, and if so, how?”

If you are interested in learning more about the topic, Daniel is happy to share his work with others who would like to read it. He is also willing to provide helpful resources on how to find or establish your own D&D games for those who may be interested. Email: dan.bishop@wearewoven.church
THE ZEAL OF AN EX-VANGELICAL:
How might Friedrich Nietzsche disciple us today?

By Ben Somervell, final year ordinand

Last year, I shocked a room of evangelicals when I responded to the question, “Who has discipled you most in your faith?” with “Atheists and the internet”. Ironically, the lapsed Christian Friedrich Nietzsche has become one such unwitting discipler for me.

A growing movement of “Ex-vangelicals” has emerged in recent years. As the name suggests, those involved have left the evangelical fold, embracing alternative worldviews including agnosticism, atheism, other Christian groupings, or other religions.

Nietzsche would fit well into this “ex-vangelical” category. His father and grandfather were both Lutheran pastors, and so Christian ministry was in his genes. Despite his father’s death in 1849 when Nietzsche was just five, Nietzsche became a devout believer, studying theology and winning a preaching prize. However, only a year later when Nietzsche was just twenty, he wrote that he had lost his faith and ultimately proclaimed, “God is dead”.

I began my journey with the 19th-century German philosopher when studying Theology at Durham. One of my closest friends at college had fallen under Nietzsche’s spell. He sung the philosopher’s praises so consistently that I ended up reluctantly reading some Nietzsche to see what all the fuss was about and to come up with a believing response. Once I was used to Nietzsche’s complex style, I began to see how one could admire his insights without accepting his atheistic conclusions: “He who knows only his own side of the argument knows little [even] of that” (John Stuart Mill). To answer the atheist’s challenge, it must first be properly understood. Also in Nietzsche, I found the forerunner to the “New Atheists” and located the roots of this seemingly new hatred of, rather than just disbelief in, God.

Nietzsche has been an invaluable tonic to my faith, providing a thought-provoking sounding board.

More than that though, Nietzsche has been an invaluable tonic to my faith, providing a thought-provoking sounding board. Paradoxically, I believe that God has spoken to me and refined my complacent and insular faith as I have digested Nietzsche’s attacks on his former religion. As a once-driven evangelical believer, Nietzsche occupies a unique position from which he can, even now, constructively dialogue with those of us who have retained our faith. He has inspired me to inhabit my faith, rather than simply putting on the “borrowed clothes” of faith. As I have engaged with Nietzsche, God has sustained my faith through the fiery brook of criticism, even speaking to me in that burning bush.

I pray that my story may inspire you to constructively engage with and, through the Holy Spirit’s miraculous power, learn from ex-Christians.

EMBER LIST 2023

We invite you to pray for our 2023 leavers and their families, as they begin their future ministries.

This year’s leavers include those training for youth, sports and children’s & family ministry through Ridley Lay Ministry (RLM) and Ridley Online (RO), those studying theology as independent students, and those training for ordination in the Church of England.

I am very grateful for being a part of this course, it has really opened my eyes to who and what I should be as a Christian, has equipped me with most of the tools needed in pursuing my ministry, giving theological words to some of the things I wouldn’t have been able to describe. Above all, it has deepened my relationship with God, my understanding of self awareness and theological reflection that will always remain with me. Thank you.

VOCATION SPOTLIGHT: Called to Uganda

Sarah and Simon trained (and met) at Ridley, in the early to mid-1990s. For the last twenty-five years they have served in the Bridgnorth Deanery in the Diocese of Hereford. Nearly two years ago they felt the call to serve with the Church Mission Society, and being in that moment between dependent children and the possibility of grandchildren, they felt free to follow that calling.

In March 2023 they moved to Gulu in Northern Uganda, where Sarah has become Principal of Archbishop Janani Luwum Theological College, whilst Simon works in the Diocese in the fields of Discipleship and Economic Development. The certificate and diploma course at the college are validated by Uganda Christian University in Mukono, Kampala. Students arrive with experience of ministering in a sub parish and study for three years. They have to find their own fees for college and work hard not only academically but also in the fields to grow the food that the college kitchen department uses for the daily meals: maize and beans. It is a radically different life from the comforts of Ridley. Morning Prayer starts at 6.45am and the day ends with night prayer at 9pm. The course material is not so different—Biblical and Systematic Studies, and classes on preaching and pastoral care, alongside a contextual course—African Traditional Religion and Community Development. “Having ministered in rural and market town parishes,” says Simon, “we are used to seeing the church as the beating heart of a local community, and are delighted to learn from local models of community building and development which are being encouraged here, in particular by Tear Fund.”

Simon has previously trained African clergy in Tanzania and Madagascar in the Rooted in Jesus discipleship course, which was developed with Tanzanian clergy and Alison Morgan (author of The Wild Gospel) to offer culturally appropriate discipleship training in this context. Plans are already in place to offer that training in Uganda, once the course materials are translated into Acholi.

“In the first six weeks,” Sarah reflects, “we have been reminded again of the faithfulness of God, as we have seen his provision for accommodation and work permits, a piece of land to grow our food, friends on the journey and for Simon the privilege of attending GAFCON in Kigali. We are out of our depth every day, but held up by the love and grace of God.”

Further details of Sarah and Simon’s work can be found on the CMS website: www.churchmissionsociety.org/people-in-mission/sarah-and-simon-cawdell-uganda
Malaysia is a federal constitutional monarchy, a multi-ethnic and multicultural country with a population of approximately 33 million in 2022. The citizens of Malaysia include bumiputera (indigenous people, predominantly Malays), Chinese, Indians and others. Despite being a multi-ethnic and multicultural country, the Malay majority dominates the Malaysian government, power and politics. Islam is declared the official religion in the Constitution, but there is freedom of religion for the other ethnic communities. In view of that, race and ethnicity in Malaysia are imbricated with religion: Malays with Islam, Indians with Hindu, Chinese with traditional religion, Taoism, Confucianism, ancestor worship and later Buddhism, and indigenous people with animism. In Article 152 of the Malaysian Constitution, the Malay language is declared as the national language of Malaysia in spite of the country’s linguistic complexity.

Historically, Western missions coincided with the expansion of Western colonialism in Malaysia since the decline of the Malay-Muslim Sultanate of Melaka in the 15th century, when successive colonisers such as Portuguese (1511–1641), Dutch (1641–1786) and British (1786–1957) conquered not only Melaka but gradually the other states of Malaya. In 1874 the Pangkor Treaty (between British and Malay Sultans) protected the indigenous Malays from Christian missionary activities, not necessarily out of respect for Islam but for political reasons. For that reason, Christianity was often considered as the religion of peoples whose ancestors were, or who were affiliated with, the colonisers such as the Chinese and Indian immigrant communities in West Malaysia.

Christianity was established in East Malaysia as a consequence of the Western missionary movement in the late 19th century. For instance, the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel (SPG) and the Church Missionary Society (CMS) were responsible for introducing Anglicanism to Borneo by sending missionaries from England and Australia. Although initially their primary purpose was to give pastoral care to the British expatriates and the Chinese immigrants, they gradually evangelised indigenous peoples.

Today approximately nine percent of people in Malaysia are Christians, represented by a wide range of denominations, such as the Anglican Church, the Roman Catholic Church, Methodists, Presbyterians, Lutherans, and a range of independent Evangelical and Pentecostal/Charismatic movements. In retrospect, Christianity has helped preserve the cultural identity of some migrant groups; and now as a faith represented among most races in Malaysia, Christianity can be a force for national unity. Churches in Malaysia, under the umbrella of the Council of Churches of Malaysia and National Evangelical Christian Fellowship, are challenged to witness God’s grace in a multicultural context in Malaysia.

DR JUDY BERINAI joined the Ridley Hall community for Easter term on the Refreshment Programme for her sabbatical. Originally from Sabah, Malaysia, Judy has taught at the Sabah Theological Seminary in Kota Kinabalu since 1991.
Ridley’s Journey to Net Zero Continues

The Church of England, as agreed at General Synod, have set an ambitious but necessary goal for all parts of the Church to reach, by 2030, a position of net zero carbon. As defined in the Church of England Routemap, net zero carbon is “the reduction as far as possible of all in-scope carbon emissions and the removal of an equivalent amount of carbon from the atmosphere for the remaining in-scope emissions by use of accredited offsetting schemes.”

As a Theological Education Institute with listed historic buildings at the heart of our site, this is no small challenge. Whilst Ridley Hall has long held the importance of hearing the call to care for God’s earth close to its mission, whilst creating a sustainable place to learn—demonstrated recently by achieving the Silver Eco Church award—there is a lot more still to do!

What have we got planned?

We have created a Ridley Hall “Net Zero Working Group” to monitor progress, offer helpful thoughts and discussion, and share responsibility for any actions required. Membership of the working group includes staff across all departments, ourPrincipal the Revd Dr Michael Volland, and our Student Environment representative. The group’s priorities over the coming months are: feasibility, achieving some quick wins, and completing a robust Ridley Hall Routemap to 2030.

With the help of expert consultants, we are having our whole site surveyed, and the way we use it analysed, to measure our carbon footprint and allow a detailed feasibility study to reveal the most effective methods to help us meet our 2030 target. We will be exploring all sustainable initiatives; from air source heat pumps and solar panels to improving our building insulation and introducing green policies amongst our staff.

In the first instance, we will be ensuring that as many of our lights as possible are using LED bulbs, to make an immediate impact on our energy efficiency. Whilst this is already the case in our shared teaching spaces, we will be rolling this out across all our student accommodation, with an aim of completing 50% of the site by the end of 2023.

Alongside this, our staff teams across all departments are committed to developing individual annual Green Pledges, beginning in September this year. Our pledges will share the ways in which each area of our site is operating in the most sustainable way possible, and commit to these becoming policy for the way forward.

It is important we continue to talk about the challenges and achievements of our journey to Carbon Net Zero. In sharing the progress we are making and the plans we have so far this year, we hope the conversation continues to grow beyond our community.

Suffering: pastoral and dogmatic dimensions

The Revd Dr Matthias Grebe (Ry. 2009–12) is Lecturer and Tutor in Theology at St Mellitus College, London, and Associate Vicar at St Edward King and Martyr, Cambridge.

In an episode of the GodPod podcast in 2022, I said that suffering, evil and sin represent a pastoral question. In everyday life, theodicy is never a theoretical question but a deeply practical one. These issues cannot be explained away; there is no rational “explanation” we can give a grieving parent who has just lost a child that will ever alleviate the pain. And it is clear that the question “Why do I suffer?” always trumps the philosophical trilemma of “Why is there suffering in the world if God is omnipotent, omniscient and omnibenevolent?”

One pastoral response to personal suffering that we can find in the Bible is lament, a practice that I argue the Church needs to rediscover afresh for every generation. Nevertheless, there is still a time and place for the dogmatic approach, which considers the rational justification for belief in a loving God in light of the suffering and evil in the world. Whereas the implications of lament for our spiritual walk with God are more obvious, and might include surrender and relenting to God’s wisdom, the second approach shapes our understanding of who God is. We therefore shouldn’t conceptualise the dogmatic approach to suffering as any less “spiritual” or caring than the call to lament—it’s about who this God really is, and how he responds to our pain.

My current research focuses on Dietrich Bonhoeffer and the “suffering God”. It asks whether it is possible to talk meaningfully and coherently about suffering within God (kenosis, self-limitation and self-giving) and anchor suffering within the Trinity without eternalising suffering.

If we take seriously that in Jesus Christ God has revealed himself most fully—“he who has seen me has seen the Father”—then we get a glimpse of who God is by looking at Jesus’ Passion. There is just no way around the cross! In Jesus, the Suffering Servant, we are confronted with a God who not only deals with our sin and suffering in a final sense, but who knows personally what it is to suffer. This is no far-off, academic, theoretical God; he not only provides an eternal end to suffering, but as the Emmanuel is with us in our own experience of it. Still, how do we make sense of this suffering God?

The T&T Clark Handbook of Suffering and the Problem of Evil offers some useful resources for scholars, laity and clergy to dig deeper into these questions. With 80 contributions, it is the most comprehensive title published on the topic, with chapters on biblical perspectives, historical figures, dogmatic themes, philosophical and ethical issues, and interreligious and interdisciplinary approaches by leading academics from around the world.

The T&T Clark Handbook of Suffering and the Problem of Evil is edited by Matthias Grebe and Johannes Grössl and is due to be published by Bloomsbury in July 2023.
